

Sergeant John Manning was a simple Marine who liked spicy foods, big guns, and even bigger explosions- so long as those guns and explosions weren't pointed in his direction. When offered a well-paying job after being unceremoniously drummed out of his beloved Corps on a medical discharge, he jumped at the opportunity for good money and the prospects of a bright future. For the first time in recent memory, John had a chance at life. Then his life turned into a horror movie. The secret research station hidden on the moon of Titan was not just any government facility. It harbored dark secrets and frightening realities. The scientists here have not only studied more than just the local fauna, but have discovered something far more important. A discovery which would shock the very foundations of the universe. Something out of a nightmare. The depths of Kraken Mare hid a horrifying truth, and the unwitting Marine stumbled right into it.

NASA's Cassini space probe discovered abundant lakes and even rivers in Titan's polar regions. The largest lake, or sea, called Kraken Mare. This consisted of measurements of Titan's northern lakes, which included Ontario Lacus, Ligeia Mare, Punga Mare, and Kraken Mare. The largest of the three. A small crew is sent to Titan, one of the moons of Saturn, to investigate mysterious wreckage on the floor of its largest methane ocean - Kraken Mare.

Kraken Mare, a body of water on Titan, Saturn's moon, with an area larger than the Caspian Sea, is a sea of hydrocarbons, mainly methane. The largest body of liquid on Saturn's moon Titan is the formidably named Kraken Mare, a sea of methane that sprawls some km². And there, in the heart of Kraken Mare, an archipelago of islands that pinch the sea almost in two to form a perilous strait where, just maybe.
