

All ready now! In position, everyone! Half a score of actors and actresses moved quickly to their appointed places, while overhead, and at the sides of them hissed powerful electric lights, and in front of them stood a moving picture camera, ready to be operated by a pleasant-faced young man. Ready? came in questioning tones from Mr. Pertell, the stage director, as he looked sharply from one to the other. A tall, well-built man, with iron-gray hair, nodded, but did not speak. Let her go, Russ! Mr. Pertell exclaimed. Vait! Vait a minute! called one of the actors, with a pronounced German accent. Well, whats the matter now, Mr. Switzer? asked the director, with a touch of impatience. I haf forgotten der imbortant babers dot I haf to offer mine enemy in dis play. I must have der babers.
