

Leila Garner never understood why her mother wouldn't let her make a wish. Never on her own birthday candles and not even when she would see a falling star. Now in her twenties, she discovers it was because of a semi-competent fairy godmother and a wish gone bad. But Leila is optimistic and excited to find this fairy godmother and make her own wish—what could possibly go wrong? Leila is willing to take a chance to get the highlife she's always imagined. She's not asking for all that much, really. Just a job with a top fashion magazine, designer clothing, and the love of gorgeous, successful Jackson King. It's time to make the ultimate wish, so she rushes to find fairy godmother Donna and set her future in motion. Has Donna learned anything since bungling Leila's mother's wish? Apparently not. While Leila technically gets what she wished for, Jackson King isn't living up to his name, and the dream job is anything but. When she meets Lucas Knight, she's sure she's made a terrible mistake, and this life isn't what she wants after all. Leila's only wish now is to find a way to set things right. Is there any hope for her happily ever after? Or is it all just Wishful Thinking?
